GEOLINO

GEOLino is the perfect documentary series for inquisitive boys and girls aged 5 to 16 years.

GEOLino follows in the footsteps of its big sister programme 360° - GEO Reportage.

It portrays the daily lives of outstanding children and tells fascinating animal stories. The documentaries inspire children to think and explain the world: from the nucleus to the Big Bang, from children in India, to the Amazon jungle, to polar scientists in the eternal ice of Antarctica.

For 18 year old Guo Jia the day begins at 5:30 am with endurance training. After breakfast there will be stretching and Kung Fu Fight classes, just before the normal school classes start.

For four years now Guo Jia is visiting the only women's Kung Fu school in China: a boarding school for 70 girls, located in a secluded valley of the holy Shongshan Mountains.

Goa Jia had always dreamed of becoming a Kung Fu fighter - learning how to jump over roofs and walls like her heroines in the movies. She feels privileged to be part of the school and now it is her time to show what she has learned- in a competition against another school.

Fast as the wind a group of young monks gallops through the wild forest in the north of Thailand, close to the border of Burma and Laos. Their monastery is located in the so called "Golden Triangle" a popular location for crime and drug distribution.

With their abbot Phra Khru Ba Neau Chai the monks are on their way to the village Hua Mae Kham, where they are about to meet 7 year old Pumpui, a little thief and liar. His parents aren't able to take care of him properly, which makes the little boy an easy victim for a career in drug dealing. That is why Abbot Phra Khru Ba Neau Chai wants to take the boy to the monastery, to educate him and provide him a better future. As all the kids there, Pumpui will learn about discipline and responsibility.

Many young men of Burundi turned an old tradition into occupation: they are "Batimbos", drummers. Their huge drums are carried traditionally on the head. Following the rhythm of the drums the young men jump into the air and perform acrobatic tricks according to a set choreography.

Some of the men are even able to play their drums with their feet- while they are walking! The power and energy they develop seems unbelievable and gives courage and hope for a new beginning to a country tainted by sorrow and suffering due to civil war. To pass the traditional knowledge on, there is a child in every percussion group. One of the talents is the little Luxel, called Reagan. Just like his father Luxel wants to be a drummer one day. Soon, the little boy will have his first public performance.

But a rescue is always difficult as the rescuer itself can be in danger. Like Mia, the Italian rescue dogs are mostly Newfoundland's- dogs who love the water and with a weight of at least 66 pounds (30 Kilo?), are able to pull people out of the water. For 3 years the dog-owners and their animals are trained to save lives. But the biggest challenge for Ester waits at the end: a jump out of a helicopter.

He wants to show his students what it means to be an artist: hard work and great performances, no matter what or where.

15 - AUSTRALIA JENNY AND HER FLYING BOXES

The North coast of Australia is home to thousands of flying foxes. But their lives are in great danger as the little animals are threatened by an unexplored disease.

This peculiar disease causes a paralysis and let the poor animals fall from their nests. Unfortunately this occasion is taking place in the birth season and leads to a chain reaction: If the mother dies the offspring can't survive as well. But the flying foxes in Queensland are lucky. They are picked up and rescued by Jenny and her team of volunteers. In her rebuild home, Jenny cares for all suffering flying foxes and coddles them up until they have a chance to survive by their own.

16 - INDIAS JUNGLE BOOK HOSPITAL

In the densely populated India, living space for wild animals is getting short. Around the country land is being cultivated and houses are constructed. India's only scientifically run rehabilitation center offers shelter for wild animals.

Here veterinarians Dr. Phulmoni Gogi and Dr. Prasanta Boro take care of ill and injured animals, which got in conflict with civilization and would have hardly survived on their own: a feverish buffalo, a dozen orphaned elephants and a young rhinoceros. With a lot of dedication and patience, the doctors aim is to slowly raise the awareness of the people to save the wild animals.

One Q´eros custom is to give children responsibility for looking after a newborn alpaca "cria" (Spanish for "baby"), especially in its first months.

Rugged country, thin air and a hostile climate - that is what Christobal's homeland is like. The nine-year-old lives high up in the Peruvian Andes and is a member of the indigenous Q´eros people. Descended from the Incas, they still observe their own rules and traditions to this very day. One Q´eros custom is to give children responsibility for looking after a newborn alpaca "cria" (Spanish for "baby"), especially in its first months. Christobal can hardly wait to become its godparent. Each day he checks to see how the expectant alpaca is doing. Then it's time - but there are problems...

There once were as many as 4,000 elephants working with their mahouts in the forests of Thailand...

But when the government stopped the destruction of the forests at the end of the 1980s, many of the mahouts, or elephant keepers, moved with their animals to the large cities. This is also what Non Yamdee did. He lives with his 35-year-old elephant cow Poon Thap on the outskirts of Bangkok. But now he has heard about a new elephant camp in southern Thailand which allows mahouts and their animals to make a living. He wants to go there. GEOLino Reportage accompanied him and Poon Thap on their adventurous trek.

There's an emergency at the rescue center. A married couple has found a young sloth and is asking Encar Garcia for advice.

Together with her husband, the Spanish woman started the animal rescue center for animals of all kinds along the eastern coast of Costa Rica. Their Noah's Ark now has more than 120 residents, including a horse, spider monkeys and howler monkeys, many kinds of local snakes and lizards, spiders, wild birds, armadillos - and sloths. The sloths have truly turned Encar's life upside down. That is exactly what sloths are really good at doing. For days on end they hang upside down from branches. And as for being lazy... They may seem prehistoric, but they aren't lazy at all!

Volcanic forces have formed awe-inspiring landscapes in the middle of the Atlantic Ocean. There are few other places on earth with so many species living so close together.

The Azores rise up from almost 10,000 feet below sea level to an elevation of some 1,000 feet, and in a few places even as high as six or seven thousand feet. Thanks to warm ocean currents, the Atlantic offers rich nourishment to countless inhabitants of the sea, and is a paradise for whales and dolphins.

The Chao Phraya river winds like a snake through the metropolis of Bangkok. Every day, a handful of men dive for treasure - with homemade diving bells!

The Chao Praya meanders like a snake through Thailand's capital city of Bangkok. Centuries before, kings, European trading companies and immigrants from other parts of Asia settled along the banks of the river. And so today the Chao Praya is an unfathomable treasure chest. Thailand's River of the Kings is home territory for Tding Panthong and his uncle Somchai. The two are treasure divers. They search underwater for things which dealers, monks and warlords sank, lost or hid in the river over the centuries.

They are the stars on Columbia's highways: the chivas.

These trucks, which have been converted into buses, transport people to the remotest regions and villages, even on unpaved roads. Working by hand for months, the vehicles are painstakingly turned into works of art. Humberto Restrepo is one of the most experienced chiva drivers. Humberto goes by the nickname "Frijoles," which means "beans," because he loved to eat beans so much when he was young. Now he wants to win an important chiva competition with his newly created bus.

To most people, Switzerland means meadows of wild herbs, snow-capped mountains, and crystal-clear lakes.

The Bettmeralp is situated in the Swiss canton of Valais. This is where 15-year-old Alexander Eyholzer lives. During the summer holidays, he helps out around the farm and in the mountain cabin of his Uncle Stefan. But Alexander's favorite chore of all is tending the family's - very special - cows. The ancient Alpine Herens cows ("Eringer" in German) are one of the smallest cattle breeds in Europe. Alexander enters his cows in traditional cow fights. This time he has entered his cow "Bandid." Will he win?

Today, only a few thousand remaining koalas live on Koala Coast in the Southeast of Queensland. Throughout Australia, there are between just 40,000 and 100,000 animals.

For several weeks now, koala cub Neil has been living with his foster parents, an elderly married couple, in the seaside resort of Port Macquarie on Australia's subtropical east coast. The orphaned cub was found without his mother and is about nine months old. He still needs plenty of affection and his daily feedings of milk. Koalas can only care for themselves on their own once they are a year old. Australia's first koala hospital is also located in Port Macquarie. Whether suffering from burns or infections - since 1973 all injured, sick or abandoned koalas from the region find temporary refuge here.

The inhabitants of the Cambodian village Prek Khmeng live on fish and rats - especially in the rainy period during the floodwaters, when a lot of rats take to the trees. This is the period when rats are deemed to be "clean" and so are eaten as deli food.

Tonle Sap in Cambodia is the largest lake in Southeast Asia. The Krouy family lives and subsists on fishing. But now, at the beginning of September, the lake's water level is at its highest. The nets no longer reach the bottom. Catching fish is becoming more and more difficult. That's why Sey Ha and his friends go rat hunting. By selling the rats, they are able to earn money in the rainy season. If there is no money for other meat, the rodents also end up on the dinner table. Sey Ha wants to treat his mother to something special with the money he makes.

Komodo dragons, which are giant lizards, constitute the major attraction of the country's national park.

David Robert Hau, chief ranger at the National Komodo Park, has spent more time with the dragons than with his own family, travelling to remote areas on their trail, as well as on the trail of other animals, such as the Javan spitting cobra and the white-lipped pit viper.

The Komodo National Park, which spans several Indonesian islands, is the last refuge for the world's largest lizard, the Komodo dragon. The Komodo dragon first put in an appearance four million years ago but was only discovered by Western scientists in 1910. Thousands of thrill-seeking tourists flock to admire the Komodo dragons.

With his Karelian Bear Dogs, American biologist Carl Lackey deliberately frightens bears to keep them away from urban areas.

In Nevada, Brown Bears often rifle through people's dustbins, running the risk of getting shot. To protect the bears, Carl Lackey, a biologist with the Nevada Department of Wildlife, captures them then releases them far from people's homes. His Karelian Bear Dogs are his finest weapons - their aggressive barking sends the bears packing into the forest.
